President's Address

Thank you to everyone who attended the last meeting.

We still need a Secretary and many committee chairpersons. If you would like to help the club be more successful, please volunteer to try a committee chair for a month. It may be easier to do that job than you thought. I asked Harry Crawford if he would do the 50:50 that night and at the end of the meeting he said that he feels he had found his niche. He took the 50:50 supplies home with him. Some of the jobs are just that easy. Refreshments are relatively easy also. All you have to do is make the coffee and cold drink for the meeting and ask others to bring the refreshments. The club supplies the coffee, drinks, and decorations for the table. The job can be shared with others. Maybe you can join with a friend and try the job for a month.

Everyone's help is appreciated.

This is your club.

All of us share the responsibility to make it great.

Jill Molson

Purposed Change to Article V Section F of the Rules and Regulations

*Currently reads:

(F) Report both to the Board and to the general membership on any potential new claims for the Association. The report must include the results of the research and the sampling as well as any other requirements such as a bond notice/plan of operation, equipment restrictions, along with a yes/no recommendation (to purchase or locate) The final yes or no decision must be made by the general membership.

As proposed revision (parts to be deleted are lined out and added portions are in italics:

needs!!!!

(F) Report both to the Board and to the general membership on any potential or actual new claims (if located) for the Association.

(1) The report must include the results of the research and the sampling as well as any other requirements such as a bond notice/plan of operation, equipment restrictions, along with a yes/no recommendation (to purchase or locate). (2) An annual budget appropriation of $1500.00 must be made to cover the cost of either a refundable deposit on the purchase of an existing claim pending membership approval or the cost of locating a new claim (BLM and county filing fees).

(3) Should a potential claim be available for location rather than purchase, the claims chairperson, after research to ensure there are no existing, active claims and adequate sampling, may file claim paperwork expending from $300.00 (for a 20 acre claim) up to $1400.00 (for a 160 acre claim) without further authorization. The location of the new claim must be reported to the general membership at the next general meeting and in the Drywasher Gazette.

(4) To maintain the corporation right file the small miner's waiver to the claim maintenance fee, claims may transferred title into the name of one or more V.P. members with a signed agreement for the Corporation to maintain the claim with necessary filings and payment of any taxes, while permitting members to work the claims without fees. It must include an agreement to transfer title to another member or the corporation if they do not maintain their membership and that title automatically reverts to the corporation in case of death.

(5) The final yes or no decision to purchase, keep a newly located claim, sell a claim, or abandon a claim must be made by the general membership.

*Discussion:

The stricken portion of the main paragraph requiring a report to the board was removed because it conflicts with Article V Section 8 of the Constitution and Bylaws requiring the Claims Committee to be and must be a separate entity from the Board of Directors. As a courtesy, the Claims Chairperson may give a report to the Board but cannot be required to do so. Because of some serious discussion this year over the internal procedures for locating a new claim, it was felt by these needed to be better delineated in the Rules and Regulations. In sub-section 1, the requirement to report a recommendation to locate a claim (not purchase) was deleted as to some serious concerns about length of time it takes to accomplish a location if it has to be taken to the Board and general membership for approval and get authorization to expend club funds. There are several "paper-hangers" active especially in the Coolgardie, Big Bear, and Dale areas. If they discover that a claim is open (and especially if someone is interested in it) they immediately file on it, and you have lost it unless you are willing to buy it at their price.

Sub-section 2 was added to ensure funds are available immediately to pay the necessary filing fees if locating a claim or a required refundable deposit if purchasing one.

Sub-section 4 was added to codify the ownership.

Benchmarks: April 1, 1877: Prospector begins search for Tombstone's silver

On April 1, 1877, Ed Schieffelin arrived at Fort Huachuca in southeastern Arizona. Schieffelin, a prospector who had tried his luck all across the West, came to the desert looking for untapped riches. The soldiers at the fort warned him that the only thing he'd find was his own tombstone. But by Aug. 1, Schieffelin found what he was looking for: silver. He named his first mining claim Tombstone. Schieffelin's discovery set off a silver rush in Arizona's San Pedro Valley, and soon the entire area earned the name Tombstone. By 1881, the community grew to 4,000 residents, making it the largest city between New Orleans and San Francisco. That same year, Wyatt Earp and Doc Holliday reached for their holsters during the infamous shootout at the O.K. Corral. Although that gunfight secured Tombstone's legacy in American folklore, the region's silver industry left a more tangible mark on history: Between 1879 and 1970, Tombstone produced more than $38 million worth of silver. Arizona's silver mining history began a few centuries earlier. Native Americans in the area mined a variety of substances, including cinnabar, turquoise and clay, as early as 1000 B.C. But it was not until the Spanish

Conguistadors arrived in the 1500s that the search for more precious metals started. In 1736, a rich silver deposit, named Planchas de Plata (sheets of silver), was discovered on a ranch named Arizona in what is today Sonora. Mexico. Ranchers found slabs of silver, including one that weighed more than a ton. The discovery of Planchas de Plata led to a small silver boom in the region, but silver mining in the modern-day state of Arizona didn't really take off until the late 19th century. Federal laws made silver an attractive mining commodity. In 1873, silver had been demonetized. But the yearslong economic depression known as the Panic of 1873 led some lawmakers to suggest re-establishing a dual gold/silver currency system, in part due to new discoveries of large silver deposits in the West. To that end, in 1878, Congress passed the Bland-Allison Act: Under the law, the U.S. Treasury had to buy $2 million to $4 million worth of silver each month to make currency, providing mining companies with a stable market. In 1890, the Sherman Silver Purchase Act replaced the Bland-Allison Act, requiring the federal government to buy 4.5 million ounces of silver every month. Arizona in particular was an appealing place to mine silver because Arizona Territory Governor Richard McCormick had instituted laissez-faire policies in the 1860s to promote the territory's mineral development; miners did not have to pay taxes on the products of their mines. With these favorable laws in place, prospectors began their hunt for silver in earnest in the 1870s. One of these prospectors was Ed Schieffelin. Born in Pennsylvania in 1847. Schieffelin and his family soon moved west. He spent much of his childhood in Oregon, where he first tried his hand at prospecting. In 1864, he left home, and a series of odd jobs took him all across the West. In January 1877, he tried prospecting near Arizona's Grand Canyon. After coming up dry, he traveled with a party of Indian scouts to Fort Huachuca. Near the fort was the nearly abandoned Brunckow Mine. Its owner did not operate the mine, but he hired workers to conduct an assessment each year so he could hold onto his claim. Schieffelin was hired as a guard. As he stood at his post, his prospector's eyes noticed hills in the distance that looked promising. He decided to investigate the area. "The [silver] ledges in Tombstone were pretty hard to find," Schieffelin recalled in an interview years later. "They did not crop boldly out of the ground ... All that summer I did not find anything of great importance; I found some good ores and good float [debris from an eroded lode deposit that gets washed away] and found several cropping's ... I found enough, however, to satisfy myself that there were good ores there, or ought to be." Despite the meager findings, Schieffelin traveled north to Tucson in August 1877 to file a claim, which he named Tombstone. He also filed a nearby claim, called Graveyard, on behalf of one of his fellow assessment workers. The first mining claims in the San Pedro Valley did not ignite a silver rush. Instead, Schieffelin's continued search at Tombstone left him near penniless. With just 30 cents in his pocket and a few ore samples, he left Tombstone that fall to find his brother, Al, who was working at the Signal Mine in northern Arizona. In January 1878, Al brought three of Ed's ore samples to the Signal Mine's assayer, Richard Gird. Gird was confident in his assessment skills. Before coming to the Signal Mine, he had made a topographical map of the Arizona Territory. Years later, Gird said in Out West magazine that his years of experience and geological knowledge meant he could "predict the kind of geological formation that produced the ore Al handed me." Gird was pleased with what he saw: He assessed the most valuable ore, a sample from the Gravevard claim, to be worth $2,000 a ton. Based on this ore sample, Gird suggested the three men leave the Signal Mine and head to Tombstone. The fact that Gird left a good job at the mine (and a promotion to superintendent) tipped off many local miners to the prospects in Tombstone. By the time the Schieffelin brothers and Gird reached Tombstone, they were not the only prospectors searching the area's hills. Despite the good ore samples, the Tombstone and Graveyard claims proved disappointing. But that didn't deter Ed. He continued to comb the area for silver ore. One day, he brought Gird another sample, which Gird valued at $2,200 to the ton. "The next morning," Gird recalled, "I went with Ed to the spot where he had picked up the piece of float ... and soon found the Lucky Cuss ledge — the real discovery of the mines now known the world over as the Tombstone mines. I picked up more rich float, some of the pieces assaying as high as $9,000 a ton." The partners followed up the Lucky Cuss find with the Tough Nut claim (like a tough nut to crack) and Contention (so named after a dispute with other miners over the claim). The discoveries led to the silver boom that made Tombstone a bustling mining community. But the Schieffelin brothers didn't stick around. In March 1880, they accepted an offer of $600,000 for their shares in the mining claims. Gird didn't think the time was right to sell; he held onto his mining interests for another year, and then sold his rights for the same price. Though the silver rush had barely gotten under way, the Schieffelin's and Gird were probably smart to sell when they did. In 1893, Congress repealed the Sherman Silver Purchase Act, and demand for silver plummeted — as did miners' fortunes in Tombstone. Tombstone nearly became a ghost town until the town reinvented itself as a tourist destination, a place where visitors could experience the Old West and watch re-enactments of the gunfight at the O.K. Corral. The site and surrounding county also became a popular movie set, with more than three dozen movies filmed in Cochise County, including "Tombstone" and "Young Guns II." Although Ed Schieffelin left Tombstone in 1880, he did not leave the town for good. In May 1897, he collapsed and died in the doorway of his cabin in Oregon, where he had moved to begin another round of prospecting. His body was brought back to Tombstone, and laid to rest with a pick and canteen near the original Tombstone claim.

«Our 40th Year»

Happy 40th Anniversary Valley Prospectors By Lorraine Frost

When did we start the Drywasher's Gazette? In 1980, the club decided to start printing a newsletter. Our first Editor was Dick Haskell. Since Lorraine "Gorski" Frost had access to a computer, she was the typist. Through the years, the Drywasher's Gazette has kept our club members informed and also provided information to prospective members. We thank all the editors throughout the years for helping our members stay connected.

Now here is the challenge – find the oldest Drywasher's Gazette you may still have and bring it to the February meeting. There will be a prize for the oldest edition.

Enjoy the 40th year celebrations.
